Institutional Review and Planning Framework

Helping agricultural extension service providers include approaches that improve gender equity and nutrition outcomes.

Extension professionals often contribute to improving rural households’ lives, but does it seem effective to add gender mainstreaming and nutrition integration to their existing (and very full) responsibilities?

This institutional review and planning workshop will guide participants to:

- Reflect on their organizational missions
- Consider how their current work is already contributing to gender equity and improved nutrition
- Identify how work in these areas will create greater impact
- Address common organizational challenges
- Propose strategies to improve delivery of quality services
- Identify concrete ways in which existing services can incorporate gender and nutrition
- Develop a plan for making the changes required
- Gain resources for further information

This workshop will empower organizations to better support healthy, well-nourished farming households that produce more diverse foods for robust markets, benefiting both men and women.

Audience: Organizational management, and regional/district supervisors
Time commitment: 1½-2 days
Expected release: Available in beta form upon request; public release to follow field testing
More information: Edye Kuyper: emkuyper@ucdavis.edu